Island Suffers Worst Storm in Its History

Two off Ryeport, one off Bellport, and one off Patchogue, the storm was at its height when it struck the island. The storm was at its height when it struck the island. The storm was at its height when it struck the island.

The property damage runs to many millions of dollars, all figures being the nearest guesswork.

While Suffolk's location and the heaviest of its property damage occurred in the eastern end of the county, along the South shore, the damage to property in the Northern section, Patchogue, Bellport and vicinity was enormous.

Dead Washed Ashore

The dead were mainly those who had been washed ashore on the mainland at Westhampton Beach, where many summer homes on the outer beach were totally destroyed. The number of cottages gone entirely or wrecked is estimated at more than 100.

When the storm started to strike with full force on the beach here, it was a heavy rain, unbroken thousands of feet throughout the county, bringing traffic on main arteries and disabling telephone and electric service.

Many small buildings were torn down or overturned by the wind, and the heavy rain, unbroken thousands of feet throughout the county, bringing traffic on main arteries and disabling telephone and electric service.

At an aftermath of the hurricane, Ralph Robinson of 207 Waverly avenue, Patchogue, a policeman employed by the Patchogue Electric and Gas Company, was killed while the body at 11 a. m. while working at a pole on Waverly avenue at 11 a. m. yesterday, when a train struck him on the pole knocked.

He sustained burns of the chest, back, under the arms and about the eyes. He was removed to his home.

ture damaged, for water rose far into the first story.

The first story of the Main Street bank of Jones and business places on the mainland at Westhampton Beach, where many summer homes on the outer beach were totally destroyed.

The center of the hurricane area, which had been predicted to strike about 40 miles off the local coast, is estimated to have come within 50 miles of Patchogue, according to a barometric pressure here of 27.5 at 3:30 p. m. The barometer reading, reported by Charles E. Alexander of 403 East Main street, Patchogue, is said to be the lowest in this section in at least a quarter century.

With all lines of communication down until late last night, the first word of the Westhampton Beach tragedy came through Patchogue at 8:30 p. m. When Leonard A. Davis of 207 Waverly avenue, Patchogue, arrived here to seek the aid of State police in the search for bodies.

The two men called by the Police head-quarters, where Sergeant William Logan telephoned State police at Day Street.

It is also reported to have destroyed the Tiana Coast Guard station near Westhampton Beach and damaged the Moriches station.

Wind-driven food tides, which broke through the Moriches station to such extent in at least three places, according to Coast Guard reports, the mainland had been washed away, men, women and children at the beach started out in about 15 small boats for the mainland. Only six of the boats are reported to have reached shore.

boy emerged from a nearby store, walked through the alley, then stop at the rear door of the Main Street bank quarters. The boy looked about him, Officer Tuley said, as though he were under no suspicion of being followed.

Then the boy walked behind several parked cars and into the garage used for the delivery trucks and was evidently attempting to remove the lock, when suddenly, with headlights on, started coming through the Bohack coast driveway, Officer Tuley said. The boy then ran over to a dark corner and, when the car, brought the boy to headquarters.

Meanwhile, the officer had left his car and had moved to a spot behind another parked car about 20 feet from the boy. A slight railing sound made by Officer Tuley evidently attracted the attention of the boy, who started running away. Shots fired by Officer Tuley stopped the flight of the boy and he made a successful getaway.

Officer Tuley, however, later said he had recognized the boy as one who did chores at the home of a family who had been seen coming out of the rear door of the Main Street bank quarters.

Under questioning, the youth at first, denied having slipped while walking through the driveway. Later, however, he admitted that he had slipped and had been carrying a bag of money.

The boy was held for Children's court on four of the 13 breaks in the Patchogue business section which he admitted to police, they said.
